A new unconventional theory came to being in the modern philosophy, a theory which elongates our limited conventions beyond ourselves, into the unlimited, as their extrapolation. We cannot reflect the unlimited, neither can we comprise it yet we can extrapolate our conventions beyond ourselves and beyond humanity. In this theory there is the truth of the simultaneity which proves that everything is paradox and simultaneity, from us to the solar systems, from the strain of grass to unknown universes. In this context the book presents, in a literary form, the simultaneity of the three realities or universes, in which we are and live, not separate nor parallel as some might believe. - a limited, conventional reality, always dependent on our limits or the system of reference we support, a reality/illusion or void, a world of ideas from each of us where the spirit is precisely the simultaneity of these ideas and nothing else, and where time and space have no dimensions, they are dependent on their existential support and they disappear along with it. - a limited/unlimited reality or Reality in Itself or the nature which we are and which we reflect, interpret, we make a model of our limited ideas, conscious or unconscious, in the spirit which defines us, a reality which the spirit reflects into ideas. - a reality which is unlimited, unconventional, perfect yet impossible to understand, to reflect, which is not dependent on ourselves or on a conventional system of reference, a reality which cannot be reflected by anyone or anything ever, which is the Universe in Itself beyond ourselves or beyond any of our intuitions or beyond any universe/entity and which we and any universe/entity are a part of. Many can mistake this universe for God, let us not forget that there are many different Gods and the Universe in Itself is unique and unlimited. The author overcomes these limits of confusing God with the Universe in Itself and he clears everything up through the Universe in Itself, which is the simultaneity of all these positive or negative models of God, separated or simultaneously, in a positive/negative simultaneity, beyond any conventional and limited logic. The fact that the novel does not have a name, nor characters with given names, tells us one simple thing that people must understand and not just guess, the Universe in Itself does not know it exist nor that we exist, it is existence itself without even knowing it, we know we exist as long as we exist. All this in a literary and accessible form for those that don't read just to read, for those that want to find the secrets with their own mind without destroying them beyond their own limits, for those that want to think and not just watch things. All these worlds are part of us and we are them, from nations to simple people, plants, animals or planets. Each of them guesses this in their faith that "we are part of God" just like God is part of us. Through the title but also through the fact that there are no given names neither for humans nor nature or its elements, the author creates the permanent integration of all the elements that form the novel "The Anonymous Ones" with the Universe in Itself of which we are all part of and which just like God remains unknown for eternity just like we will be soon and, just like the Universe in Itself. We address the large, modern audience who wishes they must live, exist, who wishes and feels that existence is a necessity and not a trifle, it's not just for us but also for the Universe in Itself, we address the public who wishes to feel and at the same time think things in their depth and not just wishes to watch from the outside.
