Women Conserving The Florida Keys Susan Nugent

"The fascinating adventures of eleven unique women who in their own way helped save the Florida Keys that were threatened with overdevelopment and ecological destruction." --Tom Hambright, Monroe County Historian "Herein are stories of eleven strong women -- thoughtful, committed, and determined--who changed their corner of the world--the Florida Keys--for the far better." --Barry Stieglitz, Deputy Chief of the Division of Conservation Planning and Policy for the National Wildlife Refuge System "The heroines of Women Conserving the Florida Keys are among my conservation heroes. . . . Susan Nugent's thorough research and engaging narrative bring their back-stories and the details of their triumphs and tribulations into focus for the first time." --Chris Bergh, Director, The Nature Conservancy, Florida Keys Program "Nugent has charted a powerful confluence of person and place. . . . The paths of activism these women pursue demonstrate that . . . the elemental bond between human and home need not devolve into territorial conflict, plunder of resources, and destruction of the nature around us." --Stephanie Voss, Actor/Producer/Researcher About the Author Susan Monroe Nugent lived on Big Pine Key for ten years, and continues to visit friends there as often as possible. During her time in the Keys, she and her husband were awarded the 1995 Conservation Colleague Award from the Florida Chapter of The Nature Conservancy and the 1999 National Wildlife Refuge Award for Volunteer of the Year. Also, she and her husband worked with Barry Stieglitz, the Florida Keys National Wildlife Refuge Project Director, to found FAVOR--Florida Keys (Friends and Volunteers of the Refuges). Recently retired from a career of teaching English (Keene State College in New Hampshire; Florida Keys Community College; and Santa Fe Community College in Florida), Susan lives with her husband and cat in Gainesville, Florida. Her days overflow with writing, reading, gardening, and volunteering.
