“You will have to stop him from putting his chocolate joy stick in her at the scene” It started as a simple argument that turned into an all-out challenge. Leslie denies being a bigot. But her husband doesn't take the denial as truth. Instead of dropping the matter, he challenges her to prove that she is not a prejudice. That challenge turns out to be the bane in their marriage. The husband only learns of what his wife has done the night of the party through Sylvia, the sister of Tony, a black guy whom Leslie says she hates but kisses at that party. But Sylvia has an agenda of her own, one that this husband can't turn down after learning of his wife's cheating. But is he prepared to know more about his wife's “activities”?
